Product Description

Austenitic Stainless Steel Tube , 323.8 × 28.58mm TP347 , 347H Stainless Pipe

The material is cold. At this point, the raw material is processed in a long straight form by tube reducers known as pilger mills. Because cold pilgering is a longitudinal cold-rolling process that reduces the wall thickness and diameter of steel tubes in one operation. It may retain consistent outside diameters and concentric inside diameters. This method yields cross-section reductions of more than 90% in a single working cycle for selected material types.

When decreasing the tube, lubricants are applied on the outside diameter and inside diameter, which are subsequently degreased in annealing preparations. After reduction, this method typically yields lengths ranging from 40 to 160 feet. When producing long lengths of seamless tubing to be processed in coil form, cold reduction is the most efficient approach.
